Jonathan Manns is Board Director and Head of Planning at London-based real estate developer Rockwell Property. He was previously Director, Head of Regeneration and Head of London Planning at Colliers International, the world’s second largest real estate advisory firm. He specializes in urban planning and real estate development, from design to delivery, with a track-record of managing complex and high-profile projects.

He is also actively involved with various professional and charitable bodies: researching, publishing, speaking and teaching in the UK and overseas. He actively engages both public and professional audiences on planning matters in the UK, Europe, Asia and the USA. He is visiting Senior Lecturer at UCL’s Bartlett School of Planning, on the Editorial Board for the Journal of Urban Regeneration & Renewal and a peer-reviewer for Routledge. He is a Trustee of the London Society, a forum for built environment debate in London since 1912.

His efforts and distinction have been recognised by various organisations and publications around the world. He became the youngest ever Fellow of the Royal Town Planning Institute in 2018, having been named Young Surveyor of the Year in 2017. The Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors (RICS) recently commented: “Jonathan Manns has achieved more by his early thirties than most of us could hope to accomplish in a lifetime. His passion for urban planning, marked by accomplishments in professional and public life, have resulted in impactful leadership and sustained achievement.”