Michael Gleeson

Michael is a Chartered Environmentalist and a Chartered Surveyor, with a first degree in Building Surveying and a Master's Degree from the University of Cambridge.

Michael started his surveying career in the West End, before becoming partner in charge of a large Building Consultancy, developing specialism in Party Walls, Boundary Matters, and Rights of Light. Consequently, he has advised on many large schemes in both the Capital and the UK, and is presently working on a UK wide bank roll-out programme, plus completing a new 100+m tower at London Bridge.

With regard organisations, after leaving the West End in 2007, Michael heads up mga, a London-based specialist practice, still dealing with 'Neighbourly Matters'. These include both commercial and residential instructions, from a wide variety of clients. mga also provide an advice line for developers, Architects, and designers, to help deliver initial thoughts and feedback on schemes, either prior to purchase, or design. Under the Chartered Environmentalist heading, mga are often asked to advise on the broader aspects of development.
