Chris Buckle

Director, Residential Research

Savills

Christopher is part of the Savills Residential Research team where he works closely with planning, development and affordable housing teams in carrying out research consultancy work for clients and producing research papers for publication.

Working for a range of clients, Christopher combines analysis of market and demographic data with Savills market intelligence to find innovative solutions to their questions.

A major part of Christopher's role is keeping abreast of current economic affairs and developments in housing policy. He is instrumental in formulating Savills forecasts for the residential market.

Christopher began his career with Savills in the Chelmsford Rural team in September 2008 from Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, where he studied for degrees in Natural Sciences, Chemistry and Environmental Policy. He qualified as a member of the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors in November 2010 and joined the Residential Research team in February 2011.
